State House, Jan. 13. Affairs took an unexpected turn in the House this morning, when a resolution was adopted unanimously to return the abolishment of offsets and the flat rate on intangibles, which passed the Senate under the engineering of Senator Flinn a few days ago, to the Senate on the ground that it was unconstitutional, being a revenue measure and originating in the Senate. had the taxation bill submitted to it on the very question of the constitutionality of the bill.

While there had been some discussion in the papers about the bill being unconstitutional, the question to the large majority of the members of the House had not become a serious one until Mr. Martin introduced his resolution this morning and convinced the body that the House was capable of originating a tax bill in the regular custom and obviate any chance of becoming a party to an unconstitutional measure.

Mr. Fish, chairman of the taxation committee on the part of the House, stated that he had looked over the question with Mr. Martin of Essex this morning and said that it was plainly a question of whether the proposed bill ild be construed as a revenue measure. He had grave doubts as to the constitu- Charles M. Buzzell is Still Alive This of the measure and he wasn't prepared to say. In reply to a query by Mr. Martin as to the time he had spent in consideration of the constitu-tionality question, he replied that it had not been long, but as a lawyer member, zell shot twice at himself in his own and the only one from the House com- parlor this morning, one charge taking mittee, the thought he ought to answer effect in his breast, and although he is city had gotten into no litigation of what he construed as an insinuation of neglect that he was not on to the manner in which the measure was handled, chance for recovery. This collapse of the taxation legislation today means that an attempt will be made to wind up the session of the legislature this week, and it is probable that a motion will be presented this afterneon in the House that evening seasions be held for the remainder of the week, with a view to finishing the business.
